VOLUME FIFTY-ONE

PLACERVILLE, EL DORADO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA. THURSDAY, JULY 10, 1941

NUMBER 137

The FARMERS CORNER

by RALPH H. TAYLOR
Executive Secretary
Agricultural Council of California

The California State Federation of Labor, having abandoned its plan to referendum the bill knocking out the secondary boycott and "hot cargo," is preparing, nonetheless, to initiate a proposal which would give labor complete dominance over future sessions of the State Legislature.

Canny AFL leaders have admitted (but not for publication) that their abandonment of plans to referendum the Legislature's act outlawing the secondary boycott was due to the fact that they were fearful of the results at the polls. And not wanting to risk a turn-down from the voters, they have decided to make war on the Legislature, instead of its enactments.

The proposal which the AFL will seek to qualify for the 1941 ballot by initiative petition is designed to give the cities complete control of the Legislature, to break rural control of the State Senate, which is now elected from rural districts, and to destroy those checks and balances that are so necessary to preserve a free democracy and protect the minority groups within it.

With the Assembly already elected on a population basis, and therefore controlled by urban areas, the proposed labor initiative would abolish the present system under which the Senate is districted on a territorial basis, and would place the Senate likewise on a strict population basis.

If adopted, this initiative amendment would virtually disenfranchise 51 rural counties in California, as 16 senators would be elected from Los Angeles County and 6 from the metropolitan counties of San Francisco and Alameda.

Thus, three metropolitan counties would elect 22 out of 40 senators, and the predominantly urban counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Santa Clara and Sacramento, each entitled to one senator under the new proposal, would bring the total of urban county senators to 26. As a result, the 51 predominantly rural counties would elect only 14 senators, and each of the proposed senatorial districts would have a population of at least 173,000.

Under the existing plan of legislation, patterned after the Federal plan, the Senate is elected on a territorial basis, and the Assembly on a population basis establishing a balance of power between rural and city districts. The rural counties now elect 33 out of 40 members of the Senate while the urban areas have complete control of the lower house.

It is interesting to note, in view of labor's insistence that California change its system of legislative election, that only 15 out of the 48 states now elect both upper and lower houses of their legislature from districts of equal population. Except for Nebraska, which has a unicameral legislature, the remaining 32 states all elect one house or the other on a territorial basis.

California agriculture has much at stake on the outcome of this contest, for agriculture is still California's most important industry, despite the fact that urban population now over-balances rural population.

The raw materials which have made this state rich still come from the rural lands. True, the raw materials are finished in the cities; true, the cities are the marketing centers. But California's fundamental wealth lies in its rural districts.

Is it right to disenfranchise the rural areas of California which have brought this state to greatness? Is it right to permit the processing and distributing centers to dominate the producing areas? Is it right to permit the men who live off the fruits of the soil to dictate to the men who produce the products of the soil?

This writer is willing to leave the answers to those questions to the rang and file of Voters of California, fully confident of the results if they go to the polls informed as to the basic question at issue.

California has won its right to its place in the sun by battling all the forces of nature. It certainly won't give up that place simply because some of the handlers of its products wish to dominate the entire industry.

JAILED BANDIT SUSPECT GOES TO HOSPITAL

Worley McMurray Held At Sanatorium Under 24-Hour Guard

Worley McMurray, one of two men captured early Wednesday and charged with responsibility for a weekend reign of terror on the south side of the county, was removed from the county jail Thursday afternoon to Placerville Sanatorium.

He will be held there for observation and x-ray examination under a twenty-four hour guard. Andy Haws, of Georgetown, is the guard. As taken from the county jail Thursday afternoon about two o'clock, McMurray lay upon the wheeled stretcher which is a part of the ambulance equipment, and from a short distance gave every appearance of being in a stupor, coma, or state of semi-consciousness.

He bore physicians dressings on a bump on the back of his head about midway between the middle of the back of his neck and his left ear; another on the upper part of his forehead and another on the bridge of his nose.

McMurray was said to have put up a fight at the time he was taken by Sheriff Smith, who was accompanied by Officers Flick and Patchen, of the highway patrol, the three also capturing Ray Vincent, McMurray's companion.

It is reported that McMurray jumped from the car while enroute to Placerville while he was handcuffed and while the car was proceeding about thirty-five miles an hour. He is said to have made an uncertain landing and sprawled badly.

JOSEPH DODD SIMPSON FOUND DEAD IN BED EARLY THURSDAY

Funeral services will be held at Oakland this coming weekend, in the care of the Grant Miller mortuary, for Joseph Dodd Simpson, 64, who was found dead Thursday morning at his residence near the Church mine.

Mr. Simpson was a native of San Francisco and a musician by trade. He and his wife, Mrs. Cecilia Conroy Simpson had owned an acreage in the Church mine vicinity for twenty-five years, and following his retirement as a musician ten months ago, the couple moved to this county.

They had been to the neighboring place of Mrs. Simpson's brother on Wednesday evening and although Mr. Simpson complained of a slight indisposition during the evening, it was not suspected that the end might be near.

When Mrs. Simpson awakened on Thursday morning and her husband failed to join her in the kitchen to prepare breakfast, she sought him out and found him dead. A daughter, Marianne, of Oakland, also survives.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kipp were in town Wednesday from Rescue.

KNOX MAY FACE INQUIRY ON "SHOOTING"

Senate Naval Affairs Group Asked To Air His "Shooting War"

WASHINGTON, (AP)—President Roosevelt today placed a temporary prohibition against any American newspapermen proceeding to Iceland where American naval forces are consolidating their occupation.

WASHINGTON, (AP)—The senate naval affairs committee meets today to consider an anti-interventionist request that Secretary of Navy Frank Knox discuss reports that there is a "shooting war" in the Atlantic involving United States forces.

This almost nerveless capital was stirred by Knox's press conference implication that the navy may have to shoot to carry out the orders issued by President Roosevelt when Iceland was occupied.

Prime minister Winston Churchill contributed to the general feeling of interest with a statement that the British and United States naval forces now might be expected to co-operate in "the most dangerous waters" of the Atlantic.

Speculation regarding possible shooting incidents related to United States naval forces ordered to insure the safety of strategic Atlantic communications.

Sen. Burton K. Wheeler, D. of Montana, made the request that Knox appear before the senate committee after columnists wrote that there already had been a brush between American and German naval forces. Knox has denied there have been any.

Knox at a press conference yesterday said current orders to naval units go "further than original" instructions to the Atlantic patrol.

Discussing the occupation of Iceland, he seemed to imply that the navy may have to shoot to carry out President Roosevelt's new orders that "all necessary steps be taken to insure the safety of communications between Iceland and the United States as well as on the seas between the United States and all other strategic outposts."

At their minimum, those orders would cover the area lying west of a 7,000 mile line drawn from Iceland to British Guiana. Their actual limits depend entirely upon what may specifically be determined upon as "strategic outposts."

BARTLETTS GET BEST SUPPORT IN PLACER-NEVADA LEAGUE, SAID

Vincent Stanich, Placer-Nevada baseball league president, who conducts a sand-lot baseball column for the Sacramento Union, commended Bartletts fans for their support of the club in his column last Sunday as follows:

"Although Placerville Barts have yet to win a game this year, they still manage to draw the best crowds. They have the old home town spirit up at Hangtown and if there happens to be a good ball club representing that little hamlet one of these years, look for some record breaking attendance.

"There are a few good players up there, namely, Bud Goodin, the Clark brothers, Jackson, Michael and Spaman, but they have not really tried to get a capable battery or some real punch in the outfield. Probably the boys are just willing to enjoy themselves in playing their games, not thinking of winning pennants or obligating themselves financially.

"They gave it the old college try in signing Herm Michaels and Norm June, but these two players did not hang around long enough to see if they could develop a winning combination."

Chief of Police Ralph Jones was at the Bay District Wednesday on business.

SOVIET CLAIM 7,000 NAZIS SLAIN

1,500 Others Said To Have Surrendered During Single Battle; RAF Bombs Germany

By UNITED PRESS

Germany hurled powerful reinforcements into the second wave of blitzkrieg offensive against Russia's main defense line today, but the Red army was reported turning the enemy back with severe losses or counter-attacking strongly on the main fronts defending Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev.

Blood battles in which at least two German divisions were crushed are exacting a tremendous toll on the strength of the invader, the Russian army newspaper Red Star said in reporting that 7,000 Germans were killed or wounded and 1,500 surrendered in a single clash.

Berlin asserted that the advance on the eastern front was going on without interruption, although no details were made public. The pro-Nazi Stockholm newspaper Aftonbladet said street fighting was in progress in Tallinn, the capital of Estonia.

On other fronts, the Royal Air Force kept up its relentless offensive against German targets in the Reich and in occupied territory, bombing war industries at Aachen, Osnabruck and elsewhere, and the British advance continued in Syria pending acceptance of an armistice by the collapsed Vichy French defenders.

In air war over the eastern front, the Germans claimed to have shot down or destroyed 110 Russian airplanes and to be pounding fiercely at Russian communications and rear lines. The Russians reported shooting down 38 German planes in one air battle and said the Red air force destroyed about 100 enemy tanks.

The German offensive, having blitzed a path through the Sovietized buffer states seized by Russia, was now up against the main Russian defenses and appeared to be throwing reserve strength into the battle after the first momentum of mechanized advances was lost.

Train Child To Enjoy Fine Arts

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

You and I know that as we come in contact with the beautiful in art, music and literature; that as we mingle more with others of high taste in these respects; as we go more often to art museums, symphonies and operas, witness good dramas and read good literature, our taste is cultivated to want more of like quality. However, good taste may have been pretty well-established for some of us during our earlier years.

What are we parents doing to cultivate good taste in our growing children?

You say the school is doing much. It is. At school the child may learn something about the beautiful in art, music and literature. But out of school, alas, his taste is seldom cultivated on a very high level.

Start in Early Years

However, a few wise parents acquaint their children during their very early years, from infancy indeed, with the beautiful. The baby hears snatches from the masterpieces of music even before he can toddle, and during his pre-school years may be given selected records to provide himself good music.

His mother's voice, in speech or lullaby, has always been soft and low. She has repeated nursery rhymes to him and read to him from verse and prose, including folklore and fairy tales.

Some local civic groups have developed the children's theater so that youngsters may know the high levels of the dramatic arts. The high water mark in efforts to cultivate good musical and dramatic taste in children from 6 to 12 has been attained through the contributions of Junior Programs, Inc., a non-profit enterprise—the only non-profit organization, I understand, bringing fine music to children in hundreds of communities. Recently it celebrated its 1750th performance.

Offer Only the Best

It was my privilege to witness an abbreviated opera, "Jack and the Beanstalk," presented by a Junior Programs cast before the recent convention of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers at Boston. It was superb.

President Virginia Kletzer in presenting Dorothy McFadden, President and Founder of Junior Programs, said, "Mrs. McFadden believes that any performance by adults for children should be the very best."

Next fall a new musical drama, "The Adventures of Marco Polo," will take to the road, with actors, dancers, singers and stage managers driving their truck and car from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back, from Canada to Texas. Each day they will stop in a different town, set up their scenery and lighting in some school or community auditorium, and play to children ready and eager for their next Junior Programs show.

These fortunate children see drama, suspense, excitement; yes, but in right doses planned for their good. There is color and design, but it is created by talented artists with an eye for beauty, not for startling effect. There is music, tuneful and rhythmic, but worth hearing and remembering. There is dancing, but not within the narrow limits of tap and jitterbug—dancing that opens up new vistas of lovely movement to young eyes and bodies.

We parents are grateful for the standards set and the taste for the beautiful cultivated in our growing children by such a service as that of the Junior Programs.

Paid ESCORT

by NELLY GRAF

Copyright 1938 by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Robin Godine, rich society girl noted for reckless escapades, meets Cary Craig when Bettina Bradley, society reporter, brings him to a costume ball in Robin's home. Robin, attracted to him, is infuriated when he plainly shows that he disapproves of her. Questioning Bettina, she learns that he is a poor young man who is paying his way through medical school by working evenings for an escort bureau, which supplies reputable young men as escorts at so much an evening. Robin decides to hire him — to punish him, she tells herself, for being rude to her. Bettina, sensing that Robin may be falling in love with him, is worried — for she knows that Cary's pride would never let him marry a girl as rich as Robin.

tina sat frowning at her type-writer keys.

The reporter jumped up in surprise.

"Robin! To what do I owe this pleasure?"

"To Cary Craig, I suppose." Robin made a wry face. "I called that escort bureau, and they told me they had no one there by that name."

"Oh, I forgot to give you the name he uses at the Bureau. Customers aren't supposed to know his real name. His name there is Lance Thornton."

Then, in a worried tone, "I hope you haven't got him in bad by asking for him by his real name. They dismiss young men who give customers their real names or telephone numbers. You see the idea is to keep this escort few blocks. I'll say that Cary and I have been good friends for a long time and explain that I was the one who told you his real name. He can't afford to lose out there."

"But suppose, because I know his name, they won't let me hire him," said Robin.

"Don't worry!" Bettina reassured her. "The Godine name and money is sufficient to get what you want. That Mrs. Monteith will be quick to realize that, if you hire an escort, it is likely to bring her more business. But why do you want him for an escort, Robin? You, with all your boy friends?"

"Oh, just because," Robin answered evasively. Bettina looked at her curiously but said nothing more.

AT THE Monteith escort bureau, Mrs. Monteith listened quietly to Bettina's explanation of how Robin happened to call and ask for Cary Craig.

Then, she said, "We hadn't intended to dismiss him — he's too popular — but we intended to remind him."

"Oh, but you won't now, will you?" Robin said anxiously. "You mustn't!"

Mrs. Monteith smiled. "No. We'll overlook the matter."

"Is he busy tonight?" Robin asked.

Mrs. Monteith consulted a file of cards.

"Yes, and every night this week."

"Then next week," Robin persisted. "And — and all the weeks after that. I want him on Wednesday and Sunday evenings."

Mrs. Monteith raised her eyebrows, then produced a form with "Customer's Application" printed across the top.

"Very well. Please fill this out. The price is twenty-five dollars an evening."

Robin sat down at a desk, filled out the form, and handed it in. "Next Wednesday night, then, at eight," Mrs. Monteith said, looking over the application.

"Yes," said Robin, the light of triumph in her eyes.

ON THE way down in the elevator, Bettina said, "You're such a ridiculous child — but I suppose you must be humored."

She was worried, however, as to how Cary was going to react to this. She decided, on her way back to her office, after she had parted from Robin, that she would telephone Cary and try to explain things to him so that he wouldn't be annoyed by what Robin had done. It was probably just a whim of a spoiled society girl who thought that her money could get her whatever she wanted, but if Cary handled the situation properly, he could bring the girl to her senses.

Yes, thought Bettina, she must see Cary — make him realize that this whim of Robin's must be humored. And she'd tell him.

She was still thinking of all she would tell him long after she got back to her office.
